Let us tell you John Foley's story

He's John Wooden. He's Bob Dylan. He's Neil Young. At least that's what Bill Walton, legendary NBA player and commentator, had to say about John Foley after listening to one of his keynotes. When an NBA Hall of Famer says he "wants to be John Foley," you know you're in the presence of greatness. The second you start listening to him, you know where that enthusiasm comes from. John Foley is one of the most sought-after motivational speakers in the world, exciting and captivating audiences in sports, healthcare, technology, and everything in-between.

When you book John for an event, you're bringing out the best. He has a unique ability to build motivation among all types of audiences across any industry. Few professional speakers get their message across and are able to build focus and motivation quite as well as him.

John's experience as a former lead solo pilot for the U.S. Navy Blue Angels taught him the importance of teamwork and precision at speeds of 500 miles per hour while flying less than two feet apart from his teammates. The lessons he learned in trust and leadership led to a successful entrepreneurial career and a Sloan Fellowship at the Stanford Graduate School of Business.

John is not just experienced in a constantly changing environment but has lived it throughout his career. What comes naturally is the ability to communicate that feeling in a way that few others can.

His keynotes and philosophy focus on four core topics:

- Teamwork, particularly as it relates to collaboration and the collective potential of well-functioning teams.
- Leadership, defined by a commitment to excellence combined with processes to guide teams in changing times.
- Trust, both among peers and within the hierarchical structure of organizations.
- Performance, based on John's unique framework that emphasizes the power of choice and a positive mindset.

Every organization can leverage these truths and some of the world's most important corporations already have. Now it's time to invite John Foley to help your team find their CenterPoint.
